In 1740, a great epidemic occurred in North Carolina. The epidemic followed a yellow fever season that had started in Savannah, Georgia, months earlier and lasted for a year (or was it two?). The epidemic was named the "1740" epidemic. It killed at least a million people in North Carolina and up to three million people in South Carolina, Florida, New England, and up north into New York. There were long-lasting effects from the epidemic. The death rate in North Carolina rose to nearly 33 percent for the next three years. The death rate went down to about 11 percent by 1750. However, the effects of the epidemic didn't go away completely. On the other hand, there were economic effects from the epidemic. Farmland decreased by about 24 percent. In the next twenty years, sixty-five percent of the population in North Carolina left the state. This is more than the 1790 population loss. Economists are more concerned about these long-lasting effects on the economy. However, the effects were also cultural. "The Blues" are representative of the culture during the time of the epidemic. It is a black mourning song written by Henry St. Ilsa Weber - see note x4. Gebet zum Leben aus dem Französischen: "Chant pour a l'empereur." 1. Bernardo Tamburini "Prayer to the Emperor." Kegel, 491-494.. The mood of the music is depressing, and as a rule bears the stamp of a mystic nature.. 3. Hölty. The air is full of sin, with the insistence of a dramatic recitation of sins against God. The mood is gloomy, and the writing tragic.. 4. Heintz. Bernardo Tamburini "A Chant to the Emperor." The air is full of sin, but the mood is gloomy. The wording is dramatic. The poem by Bernardo Tamburini describes the universal nature of sin. The air is full of sin. There is no need of human suffering to remind us of the universality of sin. You can't do anything about sin, and mankind has to be reminded of it. "It is the glory of the Lord to conceal a thing" (Ps. 25:2). Although the one who prays for us is the "one God of all the nations," the prayer includes all of humanity. The air is full of sin, but the
