Through Rides of Purgatory, a Certain Valentine's Message from Sen's Nana has been found at the end of each chapter. It has come true! Nanana, along with several other characters, is wearing a costume as you'll see below in this new feature. Ain't no man gonna stop me, from falling in love with my Sen Come on and let me take you over, beyond this world into paradise Ain't no man gonna stop me, I'm taking you over, beyond this world into paradise Rei: Thelema, her Dog I look down on people, and forget them all by the time I die So I take the ones that I love, and leave 'em in my heart There's a destiny I'll never forget, deep in my soul Re: [Ascension/2.5 Update]

How to activate the Ascension & Reincarnation to earn PSO2's Most Important Memory ~ Special Video If you have anymore changes for Ascension, please post them here so we have an accurate representation of what to expect. I'll be updating the information on my blog. Cheers, Ridz It appears it is possible to do one of two things: either buy all five Revenants (Revenants with uncollected memoirs for Awakening will unlock them) or change your skin to that of a Revenant. The first method is definitely cheaper but will cost $1.50 but you won't be able to get the last three Revenants. The second method is $12.50 and is a little out of pocket but you'll be able to get every last Revenant regardless of the cost. Most importantly the Ascension feature where you can collect every last memoir this game has to offer. For those of you who do not know the Ascension feature has three different phases, or levels: Phase 1 Phase 2 Phase 3 In Phase 1, as the name implies, it is possible to collect all of the 10 memoirs that are scattered throughout the game. Each one costs $7.00 and can be bought at the party shop, so you must purchase the Ascension Pack for this to be activated. Once purchased it unlocks all 10 of the Revenants from the Ascension feature. This is the cheapest way to get these Revenants and the last three are the priciest. The Ascension Package also unlocks a Currency X and two of the subqu

Man is deteriorating and being destroyed by nuclear energy. It is the eighties and there are a lot of people getting sick of the common life. They seek the way out... But we are close to the end. Could it be the time when our time was completely up? The saturation of the world was only a base of the colossal wave of energy, waiting for its cycle to come. The wave of annihilation is coming... In the hard hard core techno/industrial course (first produced for the Eye of Horus Records, released in 1993, produced by Peron and engineered by Snowy) we will get lost in the forest of the sounds and rhythms. HARD is a massive, hard-engineered production which collects together probably the most original and insane sounds from all around the globe. Sounds of death, military voices, horror story, religious curses are intertwined into a broad spectrum of the future industrial mind. If we could gather all of the sounds and build them again, it would sound like this: • "CIVILIZATION" - Les Deux Invicte DIE • "WERGISTA" - Meshuggah • "AUSCHWITZ" - Die Toten Hosen • "DEATH PROTOCOL" - Morbid Angel • "OPERATION" - Stormtroopers of Death A music which is so powerful that it could destroy the greatest power of man (religion, capitalism...). The power of imagination, this is what is feared the most. Will a new day come, or will it be our turn? Keyboard or Game Controller is recommended TRACK LIST 01. CIVILIZATION (Les Deux Invicte DIE) 02. WERGISTA (Meshuggah) 03. AUSCHWITZ (Die Toten Hosen) 04. DEATH PROTOCOL (Morbid Angel) 05. 1865 - Henry Thoreau, a young man of exquisite sensitivity and fine intellect, finds himself at odds with his community because of his refusal to join in with the cultural and moral struggles of the mid-1800s. This novel takes place during a tumultuous time in American history. Will Thoreau, who is alone for the first time in his life, choose to play a role in the social and moral fabric of the nation? How far will the loner go to express his individualism? How far will others go to make him conform? They shall do well to beware who take upon them to put and keep alive this thorn in the flesh, for it will flourish and fester and poison all the pleasant society around it. (Emerson) 1. CHAPTER 2 Setting the Stage As Emerson wrote so eloquently, Henry Thoreau, the brilliant, sensitive, inquisitive young man who inspired the writing of this novel, has something that is not "quite alive" in his life. He is a thinker, but is not an actor. He is an observer of the world around him and his passion is almost a contradiction of his own "intellect". It is not a passion that most people would understand, or agree with, but it is simply a way that he lives and it is one that is very difficult to relate to others in the society that surrounds him. He has an idyllic childhood, living on the shores of Walden Pond, a water body he created and yet he is not without problems. For example, he is jealous of the various groups of young men his sister makes friends with, but even though he wants to emulate the life they lead, he is unable to do so. Even more complex is his relationship with his mother, as he struggles to communicate with her, while his father never wants to speak to him. With his family situation seemingly worse than when he started writing this novel, he has an opportunity to change this through a book club he is in at Harvard College. It is there that he meets a young boy, James, who does have a role in his life and wants to live up to what Emerson believed was his purpose. The club eventually leaves him for the summer and with a looming deadline, he spends his last few days at home, with his family. However, on his last day, something happens that almost makes the entire family's life turn around and change. It is the latter half of the novel, but it is well worth the wait.

What's new:

“I’ve wanted to write about timing the game twice-against Portland and Kansas-for a long, long time. I consider it a life’s work, because it’s something that has meaning so much that I believe there will be times in the future when someone says this concept and this idea will be the bellwether in understanding soccer history. So, I’m writing this at a critical point in time.”

-James "Razor" White, ESPN.com, December 21, 2009. * As I sit here typing away, I can’t help but feel like I haven’t written enough about Kansas City’s 2008. In the first game against the Timbers, KU played their best game in quite a while, if not in their history at that point. In the end, a hot streak by Preki and Heaps along with some timely goals by such players as Kelley O’Hara gave Kansas City the three points. Next up, a pivotal matchup with Chivas USA who was trying to keep pace in the final Pacific Conference standings. Against a Portland team that had just fired their coach, Kansas City played at their best to pick up three points as a way to close out league play. That win not only helped Kansas City keep pace in the standings, it also pretty much sealed the deal for Jim leavy to take over after the league. The final regular season game against the Timbers happened just this weekend, but I thought I’d end this post looking back at each postseason that the Jayhawks have had. Before the regular season, I was on the fence over whether Kansas City’s 2008 would be their best ever. I knew they wouldn’t be playing those matchups at Eugene, WV in December 2002 like they did in August, and I knew they wouldn’t be having quite the year they had this past year. It was a big leap from league play in ’08 to the playoffs in ’08, and so many things happen to changing a whole team into a playoff team-injuries and otherwise. In previous years they’d have to slip up once or twice to get into the postseason, but this year was the year. They comfortably made it in. So, I

Frontiers is a fast-paced real time multiplayer war game. Become the leader of your army and take the enemy territory from the other players. Play against other players or use the AI. Your goal is to conquer as much territory as possible. Don't forget to steal while you are in your territory. Victories are never certain until you have captured all the territory. Your task is to stay in control of your own territory, while your opponents try to steal your land. The game is full of strategic choices that will keep you busy.

- 9 game modes:
- Capture the Castle :Conquer all the territory in the game mode.
- Last Man Standing : Capture the territory of the opposite side, in a battle of ten seconds.
- One Gate Pass : One character with tokens passes through a small gate in the middle of the map to attack the enemy. The gate closes when the character is near the opposite side, and the defender can use the time to try to set up an ambush.
- King of the Hill : King of the hill, all players must be under the same flag. Whoever reaches the height of the flag first has the territory. Keep the territory while it's your turn. In addition, players can move to an adjacent map, in their own territory, if someone takes the hill.
- King of the Road : All players are on the same road, and if one player captures a territory, the others are deprived of territory until they win the territory back.
- Walled Park : Players are on a circular map, with a wall. On the inside, players have a castle. If a player leaves the castle, the castle goes away, and his territory is split. A flag can be dropped to stop the other players from moving to a territory.
- Deathmatch : Try to conquer all the territories of the other players as fast as possible.
- Battle and Battle Royale : Players decide how many battles they want to play in a row. Whoever conquers the most territories wins.
- Territory War : The goal is to take the most territory on the map.
- Zombie Survival : Survival mode against zombies.
- Castle Siege : Players defend the castle, and try to conquer the other territories. The opposite team must conquer the castle to win the game.
- Free for All : Everyone has to attack and defend one of the territories. Whoever conquers more territory wins.
- Dodge Battle : Players can protect themselves by using the arrow keys. If the player is
