What is the difference between the Windows 7, 8 and 10-A: If you run a Linux distribution, chances are that you've got a version of GCC installed. There might be a bin directory under /usr/bin that contains a compiled version of GCC (or if using a package manager, it might be installed separately). You can use this to cross-compile for Linux. If you have a bare Linux distribution, you'll have to compile GCC yourself, and that might take a while. If you're stuck with Windows, you might be able to cross-compile on Win32, but I'm not certain. A GCC is essential to compiling any language from source. C, C++ & C compiler. It's only application is to compile C code. You need a C compiler to compile C code. That's the only way to get a C compiler. You need a C compiler to compile C code for Linux, Mac and many other operating systems. You can't use any other C compiler to build any C code because C does not have any other purpose. GCC is the C compiler. There are many C compilers, but to build a C program you need to use a C compiler. FIRST DISTRICT COURT OF APPEAL STATE OF FLORIDA No. 1015-1483 WILLY BRADFORD, Appellant, v.
