Thomas Mulcair met with members of the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers in Winnipeg on Monday to discuss common issues like the economy and employment, but a union official who was in attendance — and who wasn't authorized to speak on the record — told CBC's French-language service Radio-Canada that Mr. Mulcair is a racist. Robert Fox, executive director of the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers Local 664, "revealed that Mr. Mulcair believes that some cultures are too dangerous or dangerous to be civilized," said Radio-Canada's national affairs show, Le Show, according to an English translation. Mr. Mulcair was, and continues to be, an outspoken critic of the Parti Québécois, which fought a referendum against Canada's English-speaking provinces on sovereignty. He has also been criticized by some of his rivals in the NDP for saying that the province was turning into "an ethnic dictatorship" in the run-up to the provincial election, which saw the provincial Liberals defeated. Many recent polls suggest that those criticisms might have damaged the NDP, which is struggling to maintain its level of support, and convince voters that it deserves a third term in government. Frédéric Brunet, a spokesperson for Mr. Mulcair, said the union official had not been authorized to speak to Radio-Canada and he had refused to speak to the CBC. "It's a shame that this type of attempt to smear, to attempt to distort what Mr. Mulcair said and what he said is very different from the values of the IBEW," said Mr. Brunet, pointing out that the union had never made such a statement before. Mr. Fox's comments appeared to be aimed at identifying members of the federal NDP to the union, which has made three waves of wage increases over the last five years. The union "is the only 'left' union in Canada that has never moved toward a program of higher wages," the official said. Québec's official language Mr. Fox also pointed out
