- ... And you're not making this up," I repeated for the hundredth time in the last hour, "I just realized that now. Even though it's all bullshit, I still don't understand why they can't just come and take us away, or just kill us. - They can't," Olga said, "they can't. And, you know, I don't think they know either. - How do you mean? - I didn't understand. - Well, why they can't kill us, and why they can't come quietly and take us away.

There are no drugs to treat the coronavirus, but Harvard University researchers are working on a drug that could potentially treat all the respiratory illnesses that the virus causes. Dr. David Ascher, an infectious-diseases researcher, told Business Insider the drug, clioquinol, had previously been used to treat malaria and leprosy and, more recently, to combat the flu. "It was just an old compound [with] a lot of activity in low doses," Ascher said. The US and Europe have been gripped by the Covid-19, which has killed at least 7,570 people in China and killed at least 60 people in the US as of Wednesday. Some experts are predicting there could be as many as 2 million deaths from the outbreak. Harvard researchers are working on a drug that could treat the common cold. Business Insider The World Health Organization has said 1 million people worldwide have died, but the real figure may be much higher. Ascher worked in China when the epidemic erupted there last December and studied a saltwater drain that was under construction in a rural suburb of Beijing.
